I
n July 1861, Confederate President Jefferson Davis approved Brigadier General Henry Hopkins Sibley’s plan to raise a force of Texans to take control of all New Mexico. His immediate objective was to capture military supplies from Union forts in New Mexico and to recruit New Mexicans, Utah Mormons, and Colorado miners to the Confederate cause. The mineral wealth of Colorado and California would fund the Confederacy and the ports of California might have provided blockade-free international trade.

INTRODUCTION

Col. Edward R. S. Canby, Union commander of the Department of New Mexico, soon learned of the invasion plans. With only 2,500 Federal troops in New Mexico, Canby appealed to the territories of New Mexico and Colorado to organize companies of volunteers. By early 1862, Canby had 4,000 troops at the ready.

Meanwhile, Sibley had begun his move up the Rio Grande with 2,500 Fourth, Fifth, and Seventh Texas Mounted Riflemen. The first major battle in the territory took place at Valverde, near Fort Craig, 100 miles south of Albuquerque, on February 21, 1862. Drawing the Union troops out of the fort, the Confederate Texans won the hard-fought battle. Canby and his troops withdrew into the fort. Sibley decided to press on to Albuquerque, reluctant to attack the fort without sufficient men, artillery, and supplies to lay siege to the secure Union defenders. Sibley had no fear of pursuit by the cautious Canby; the Confederates considered the Union forces too demoralized and disorganized to continue the fight.

In Colorado, the First Regiment of Colorado Volunteers had formed under the command of Col. John P. Slough and began their march to New Mexico. The 950 Pikes Peakers covered the 400 miles to Fort Union in 13 days, arriving on March 10 to reinforce the fort’s 800 troops. Taking command of Fort Union and violating his orders to remain there, Slough and the Colorado volunteers, augmented by regular army troops and New Mexico volunteers, headed toward Santa Fe on the Santa Fe Trail. By March 25, the Union vanguard of 420 under the command of Maj. John M. Chivington set up Camp Lewis at Kozlowski’s Stage Stop near the Pecos Pueblo ruins.

After the battle at Valverde, Sibley sent Maj. Charles Pyron and his Fifth Texas Regiment ahead of the main Confederate force to capture the unprotected capital of Santa Fe. The Confederate flag flew over the Palace of the Governors on March 15. Pyron’s Texans then made their way up the Santa Fe Trail toward Fort Union and camped at Johnson’s Ranch in Apache Canyon, unaware of the Union camp nine miles east. The rest of the Union troops were 16 miles back at Bernal Springs. The rest of the Confederates were camped at Galisteo south of Santa Fe.

MARCH 26 AND 27

On the morning of March 26, Chivington and a group of Colorado Volunteers left Camp Lewis on a reconnaissance mission to find the location and size of the Texas force. They surprised and captured a Confederate scouting party at Glorieta Pass. A short distance away, they ran into the main body of Tyron’s Confederates near present-day Valencia. Battle lines were quickly formed and the two pieces of Texas artillery began shelling the Union troops. Union skirmishers were deployed in flanking movements on the overlooking hills and their fire quickly made the Confederate position impossible.

The Union cavalry failed to charge the retreating Confederates as instructed, enabling the Texans to escape and re-establish their defenses. They destroyed a log bridge to impede the Union advance, but the Union cavalry crossed the gap and charged into the Confederate ranks. About 70 Confederates were pushed into a small box canyon and captured.

As night fell, both sides called a truce to care for their casualties. Pyron and his Confederates returned to Johnson’s Ranch, set up defenses and waited for reinforcements under Col. William Scurry to arrive from Galisteo, 15 miles away. Union troops withdrew to Pigeon’s Ranch for the night and returned to Camp Lewis the next morning, where Slough was waiting with his troops.

That night, Union spies warned Slough of the reinforced Confederate force at Johnson’s Ranch. A flanking movement was devised: Chivington and Lt. Col. Manuel Chavez of the New Mexico Volunteers would take 450 men over Glorieta Mesa to harass the Confederate right flank or rear. Meanwhile, Slough and the remaining 900 men would move directly against the Confederates along the Santa Fe Trail.
